Cello

Learning to play Erhu.

Jaw-Xin, aka Jaw, started playing cello when he was 10. He attended Hamilton Music Academy high school in Los Angeles where he committed to playing and studying cello seriously, taking lessons with Spanish cellist Adolfo Gutierrez with iPalpiti Artists International.

While getting his bachelors in Urban Planning from UCSD, Jaw continued his training by sheer motivation and discipline, playing with the La Jolla Symphony and UCSD musical productions. He was also an avid experimental electronic music composer and had his pieces utilized in exhibits of art students.

He attributes his love for cello and music to his teachers and he realizes the importance of having empathetic, excited and experienced teachers in the lives of children. His approach to teaching has evolved from this passion. He began working and teaching at La Jolla Music in 2004, and now is the manager.
